Foreword

---

I have the privilege of presenting an exceptional French private collection. During the past 35 years this “secret” collector has gathered with passion some exceptional treasures of Chinese art, among them pieces coming from major international collections such as those of P.P. Chiu, Meiyintang, M. Komor, G. de Batz, J.T. Tai, and Yamanaka. Some of the objects are already well known having been recorded in important publications and included in major Chinese art exhibitions held in the Springfield Museum, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Portland Art Museum and the Denver Art Museum.

Three particularly exceptional objects deserve special note:

- The exceptional bronze vessel fangyi from the Yinxu period of the Shang dynasty (circa 14th – 12th / 11th centuries B.C.).
- The superb sancai and blue-glazed earthenware monkey, Tang dynasty, early 8th century A.D.
- The exceptional bronze seated Buddha, end of the 4th century – beginning of the 5th century A.D.

I hope this exhibition of a French Collection will contribute to the ever-growing interest in Chinese Art.

I should like to take this opportunity to thank all of those who have helped me in the various stages in the production of this exhibition and this catalogue. I should especially like to thank Mr. Vincent Pradier for producing this catalogue and for organizing the presentation of the objects and Mr. Ed O’Neill for translating the manuscript into English. I should also like to express my gratitude to Mr. Vincent Girier Dufournier for devoting several days to the photographing of the objects.

1 – Ritual bronze wine vessel jue

Shang dynasty, Yinxu period
circa 14th – 12th / 11th centuries B.C.
H.: 19 cm

爵
商代,殷墟時期
約西元前14 – 12/11世紀
高: 19公分

Archaic bronze wine vessel supported by three outwardly descending legs. The vessel's deep U-shaped body is cast in low relief at the centre of one of its sides with a large taotie mask on a leiwen background divided into two sections by a horizontal notched flange and crowned with three triangular protrusions decorated with a stylized cicada motif. The other side of the vessel bears the same design with a semi-circular handle surmounted by a bovine head in high relief emerging from it. The vessel's long pouring spout and opposite horn-like pointed side are cast on their undersides with long blade-like designs decorated with stylized cicada motifs. Two upright finials covered with whorl caps grace the top of the vessel just above the area where the spout emerges from the vessel's body.

The vessel has a pleasant green patina.

Inscription

– A single pictogram is cast beneath the handle.

Archaic bronze wine vessel supported by three triangular legs. The vessel's deep U-shaped body is cast in high relief on each side with a large and powerful taotie mask on a leiwen background, interspersed with shallow notched flanges and crowned with triangular protrusions decorated with a stylized cicada motif. The vessel's long pouring spout and opposite horn-like pointed side are cast on their undersides with long blade-like designs decorated with stylized cicada motifs. The semi-circular handle is surmounted by a bovine head in high relief. Two upright finials covered with "mushroom-shaped" caps grace the top of the vessel just above the area where the spout emerges from the vessel's body.

The vessel has a nice green patina.

H.: 18 cm

觥
商代,殷墟時期
約西元前14 – 12/11世紀
高: 18公分

Archaic bronze vessel with cover, used for the conservation of fermented beverages. The pear-shaped body with an everted neck is supported by a small ring foot. The center of each side and the outer edges of the vessel are cast with narrow notched flanges.

The vessel's body is cast, on each side, with two horizontal friezes. The larger lower one is decorated with two confronting kui dragons, shown in profile, on a leiwen background, which when viewed together form a large taotie mask. The upper frieze is decorated with a pair of large flaming-eye motifs on a leiwen background.

The upper part of the vessel's foot is ornated with four stylized dragons shown in profile, each with a long elephant-trunk-like snout, all on a leiwen background.

On the vessel's cover, two taotie masks on a leiwen background are divided by narrow notched flanges. The top of the cover is graced with a small upright finial topped with a whorl cap.

The bronze vessel has a pleasant light green patina.

Provenance

高: 22.8公分

Archaic bronze wine vessel of rectangular shape. The large central section of each side of the vessel is cast with a large taotie mask in high relief set below a small taotie, both on a leiwen background. The upper frieze is decorated with a pair of confronting bottle-horn dragons, shown in profile, on a leiwen background. The lower frieze, at the foot of the vessel, is ornated with a pair of addorsed dragons, also shown in profile, on a leiwen background. The center of each side and the edges of the vessel are cast with narrow notched flanges.

The cover, decorated on each of its faces with an inverted taotie mask on a leiwen background, is cast with narrow notched flanges in the centres and along the edges of its four sides. The top of the cover is surmounted by a small faceted sloping roof-like finial, decorated on each of its sides with a small incised stylized taotie mask.

The bronze has a mottled milky green and grey patina.

H.: 35 cm

尊

商代,殷墟時期
約西元前14 – 12/11世紀
高: 35公分

Large ritual bronze vessel used to hold fermented beverages. The vessel is composed of three sections. The upper section in the shape of an opening-out wide-mouthed trumpet is decorated at its base with a horizontal band of confronting kui dragons, shown in profile on a leiwen background and surmounted by wide, rising, triangular leaf-like patterns, each decorated with a stylized cicada motif. The vessel's central section is decorated on its shoulder with a band of kui dragons, and stylised buffalo heads cast in high relief. The main part of the vessel's body and its foot are decorated with three large taotie masks on a leiwen background, each composed of two kui dragons confronting each other over a vertical flange.

The bronze vessel has a green patina.

Inscription

– A two-character inscription inside the vessel reads: “Fu Xian” (Lady Xian).

Provenance

Similar examples

- The very famous zun vessel from the H.E. Hoppenot’s Collection, now in the Meiyintang Collection, and illustrated by Deydier Ch. in Chinese Bronzes from the Meiyintang Collection, Vol. 1 Annexe, Hong Kong, 2013, p. 100 - 101, no. 60, is very similar in its decoration and shape to the present zun vessel. The difference lies in the lack of décor on the collar of Hoppenot’s vessel.
- A similar zun vessel excavated from Fu Hao’s Tomb (tomb no. 5) in Xiaotun is illustrated by Hayashi M., In Shu jidai seidoki no kenkyu (In Shu seidoki soran ichi) – Conspectus of Yin and Zhou Bronzes, Tokyo, 1984, Vol. 1 plates, p. 217, no. 31.
- Another zun vessel now in the Arthur H. Sackler Gallery, The Smithsonian Institution, Washington D.C., no. V 19, is published in Bagley R.W., Shang Ritual Bronzes in the Arthur H. Sackler Collections, Washington, 1987, p. 264.

8 – Set of four mat weights in the form of frolicking bears

Gilt bronze inlaid with agate and turquoise
Western Han dynasty, 2nd – 1st centuries B.C.
W.: 7.4 cm each

四個銅鑲金熊鎮
銅鑲金鑲嵌瑪瑙和綠松石
西漢,公元前2至1世紀
高:7.4公分

Extremely rare set of four bronze mat weights, each identically cast in the form of a bear.

Cast in the round, lying on their backs, the animals are realistically modelled with their mouths wide open, their crisply cast tongues moving, their eyebrows and side whiskers sharply etched, their rounded ears raised and their deeply set eyes and pointed noses highlighted with inlays of semi-precious stones.

The animals' sharp claws and the small fur-simulating incisions that cover their bodies add to the over-all feeling of realism that pervades these masterpieces produced by ancient Chinese craftsmen.

Each bear is bathed in a fine creamy gold gilding and inlaid in agate and turquoise. All the weights are decorated with a thick, braided, rope-like border.

Provenance

- David Aaron Collection, London, U.K., 2004, inventory no. D. 1051.
- Horiuchi Collection, Tokyo, Japan, inventory no. 8827.
- Galerie Christian Deydier, Paris, France, 2012.
- Private French Collection.

Exhibited

Published

- Galerie Christian Deydier, XXVI<sup>e</sup> Biennale des Antiquaires, Paris, September 14th – 23rd, 2012, catalogue no. 3, p. 24 - 27.

Notes

- It is extremely rare to find a complete set of four identical weights.
- During the Han dynasty, the bear was associated with military prowess, shamanism and immortality.

Similar examples

- Weights in the shape of bears are extremely rare.
- A dagger dated between the 1st century B.C. and the 1st century A.D., discovered in Tillia Tepe, in Northern Afghanistan, and now in the Kabul Museum, has a gold handle decorated with a bear inlaid with turquoises. This piece is an example of the cultural exchanges between Central Asia and China at that time.

9 – Earthenware Court lady holding a bottle

Sui dynasty, 581 – 617 A.D.
H.: 48 cm

持瓶女俑

高:6.5公分

Delightful, small sancai earthenware pillow made in the shape of a buffalo lying on a rectangular base and supporting on its back a kind of tray in the shape of a stylized leaf. The animal is covered with a cream glaze with green splashes. Its head is glazed in chestnut and green. The sancai glazed “tray” is decorated with an incised leaves’ motif and scrolls.

Provenance

– Private French Collection.

Similar example

– A quite similar wrist or pulse pillow, but in the shape of a lion was sold at Sotheby's London, on November 7th, 2012, lot no. 214.

Note

– This kind of small pillow was used either for supporting the arm while the pulse was being taken, or was used by Chinese scholars when practising calligraphy.

12 – Two brown glazed earthenware greyhounds

Notes

- From the Han up to the Tang periods, the oxcart was a common means of transport on the west part of the Silk Road.
- The most simple form of two-wheeled oxcart consisted of a stretcher-like floor with a roof supported by a wicker frame.

15 – Sancai earthenware horse and rider

Tang dynasty, 618 – 907 A.D.
H.: 41 cm

三彩陶女騎士俑
唐代,公元618 – 907年
高: 41公分

Sancai earthenware horse with a noble lady rider.

The horse stands four-square on an unglazed rectangular base. The animal's body is bathed in a cream glaze that darkens into a rich chestnut shade as it flows over the front of the equine's lowered head.

The saddle and its blanket are both covered with chestnut and cream glaze.

The steed's noble rider sits upright in the saddle with her arms dangling by her sides and her sleeve-enveloped hands placed behind the raised front of the saddle. She wears a long green dress topped by a brown-glazed long-sleeved blouse. A small high bun adorns the top of her head.

16 – Sancai glazed earthenware lion

Tang dynasty, 618 – 907 A.D.
H.: 21 cm

三彩陶獅子
唐代,公元618 – 907年
高: 21公分

Exceptional tri-coloured glazed pottery figure of a lion. Perched on a high rockwork base, the regal feline sits back relaxedly on his haunches with his front legs firmly planted in front of him and his left back leg raised high enough for his paw to scratch an itch on the left side of his turned head.

His powerful body is twisted in an elegant curve and his leftward turning head reveals a rich curly mane.

The lion's glazed cream-colored earthenware body and the base are partly covered in green and amber glaze. The mane is glazed in brown and green.

Note

- There were no lions in the wild in China during the Tang dynasty, but as the lion is a Buddhist symbol of the authority of the Buddha and the Dharma, lions were often portrayed in Chinese art. Chinese annals of the period also record live lions as being among the gifts presented as tribute to the Emperor by foreign envoys.

17 – Sancai with blue glaze earthenware monkey

Tang dynasty, early 8th century
H.: 25.5 cm

三彩陶猴
唐代,公元618 – 907年
高: 25.5公分

Important partially blue-glazed wine ewer, portrayed as an alert monkey perched upright on a indented cylindrical stool and tightly hugging a wine skin decorated in light relief with foliate tendrils. The pottery figure is covered with an extraordinarily rich sancai glaze of splashed brilliant dark and pale blues, apple and spinach-greens and rich tones of amber and chestnut with some splashes of ivory.

18 – Sancai glazed court attendant holding a singing bird

Tang dynasty, 618 – 907 A.D.
H.: 37.5 cm

三彩陶捕鳥器俑
唐代,公元618 – 907年
高:37.5公分

Magnificently attired smiling court attendant holding a multi-glazed singing pet bird in his uplifted, outstretched right hand while leaning slightly towards his left with that arm hanging downwards by his side. He is dressed in a sumptuous, flowing, body-length robe bathed in a rich green, white and orange chestnut glaze and topped by an attractive opened-out wide collar covered in an equally rich orange chestnut glaze. A finely modelled cincture with a white-glazed pouch hanging from his right side draws his magnificent robe in at the waist. On his unglazed head, the life-like smiling courtier wears an elaborate unglazed felt hat decorated with deeply moulded trefoil and wing motifs.

Notes

- From time immemorial, the Chinese have loved birds and have tamed and kept various types of birds, from parrots, to mynas and warblers, as pets. This practice was especially prevalent during the prosperous Tang period.
- In the past, sancai and unglazed figures like the present one have most often been described in catalogues as “falconers”, but it is evident that the bird in the present magnificent figure's right hand is not a falcon or hunting bird of any type, but is, in fact, a small pet singing bird.

19 – A magnificent seated court lady

Sancai and blue glazed terracotta
Tang dynasty, 618 – 907 A.D.
H.: 47 cm

三彩仕女坐俑
唐代,公元618 – 907年
高: 47公分

An exceptional figure of a charmingly proportioned young court lady seated 'European style' on a wicker stool.

The young lady is dressed in a low cut, close-fitting chestnut-coloured bodice with a small short-sleeved blue and white bolero called a banbi worn over it. A magnificent long, wide, plaited blue skirt tied under her breasts and flowing loosely across the mid and lower parts of her body down to her feet is decorated all over with delicate four-petaled flowers moulded in high relief and highlighted with splashes of white, green and chestnut glaze. An elegantly knotted single-looped bow of ribbon graces the centre of the lady's waist and its two strands stream naturally down the front of the robe to the young lady's dainty feet elegantly shod in shoes with their points turned up in the shapes of clouds.

The lady's face and upper chest are left in their natural state, covered simply with a bit of white and light pink to evoke the pale, delicate skin of a court lady, with her cheeks rouged as was the custom of the time. Around her neck hangs an elegant necklace evoking twisted strands of tiny pearls.

Her long hair is drawn up on the top of her head in a high chignon consisting of a lower, bun-like section topped by two thick, wing-like protrusions with a wide, open space between them, a hairstyle known in the Tang dynasty as 'chignon with double loops in the form of sabers'.

Lifted high in front of her to shoulder length, each of her hands grasps a delicately modelled blue-glazed flower. The young lady is elegantly seated on a drum-like stool bathed in green, blue and chestnut glaze. Such stools, most probably made of wicker, were first introduced into China from India along with Buddhism. The stool on which this young court lady is seated is richly decorated with vertical medallion-like spiralling floral motifs suggesting interlacing hearts and three horizontal thick wicker-like bands, all of which endow the stool with an air of great refinement and luxury.

Similar example

- Only one piece of similar quality, both in size and fineness, is known. Measuring 47.8 cm, but green glazed, this piece now in the Shaanxi Provincial Museum is published in The Shaanxi Provincial Museum, 1988, p. 74.

Notes

- Sancai pieces with blue glaze are especially rare since in the Tang dynasty most blue pigment had to be imported along the Silk Road from Persia, making the process extremely expensive. As a result, blue-glazed pieces of such high quality were principally made for the Emperor or members of the Imperial Family or Imperial favourites.
- Several figures of court ladies seated in 'European' style are known, but the majority of them are of a smaller size.
- During the Tang dynasty the number and even the size of the funerary figurines permitted to be used for the funeral ceremonies and in the burial of any individual were clearly specified according to the rank of the person concerned and were promulgated in official government decrees which had to be strictly obeyed. The unusually large size of the present figure shows that it was created for a person of very high rank.
- The style in which the young court lady is seated, known as the 'European style', first became fashionable in China during the Tang dynasty after it was introduced from Asia Minor along the Silk Road, the grand highway of cultural exchanges. Before the Tang, the customary fashion of sitting in China was on a mat with one's legs crossed under one, as is still the usual fashion in Japan, Korea and most of Southeast Asia.
- During the Tang dynasty great care was given to the hairstyles of the ladies of the Imperial Court, with a catalogue of elaborate hairstyles being available to the royal ladies, which included the various styles employed by Imperial favourites over the years. The young court lady depicted here has her hair arranged in the daoxing shuangfang or 'chignon with double sections in the form of sabres' style. Such a hairstyle, requiring long hours to complete, was held in place by a metal frame around which were skilfully rolled thick strands of hair.

20 – Large sancai earthenware horse

Tang dynasty, 618 – 907 A.D.
H.: 68 cm L.: 78.5 cm

三彩馬
唐代,公元618 – 907年
高:68公分

Magnificent glazed terracotta horse with its four sturdy feet planted firmly on an unglazed rectangular base.

The steed turns its slightly inclined head outwards with its mouth partially open, pointed ears upright, nostrils widely spread and attentive eyes looking downwards towards its saddle as if to ask when its rider will arrive. The top of the animal's neck is ridged with a 'crew-cut' style mane and its short, plaited upwardly turning tail is tied with a ribbon bow in the style popular among the high nobility of the Tang.

The equine's powerful body is covered with a rare light pink glaze with splashes of cream. Its beautifully modelled multi-layered saddle blanket is bathed in a rich green, white and orange ochre glaze and is topped by a simple and yet elegantly proportioned saddle covered in an equally rich orange ochre glaze.

The animal's body is caparisoned in a realistically modelled set of harness trappings in high relief from which hang large leaf-shaped medallions, each of which is decorated in its centre with a crouching frog which appears to be about to leap upwards.

21 – Exceptional bronze seated Buddha

End of the 4th century – beginning of the 5th century A.D.
H.: 40 cm

青銅坐佛
公元4世紀末至公元5世紀初
高：40公分

Extremely rare bronze figure of a meditating Buddha, represented seated cross-legged with his hands folded in front of him, in an unorthodox version of the dhyana mudra (the gesture of meditation).

His monastic robe is worn over both shoulders in the Gandharan style.

The Buddha's head is topped by an ushnisha, which is the symbol of the wisdom and spiritual power of the Buddha. The almond-shaped eyes, the straight nose and the delicate smile give to his face an expression of complete calmness and confidence.

The Buddha is seated on a high pedestal which is decorated with two seated lions depicted frontally, flanking three dharmachakras ("wheels of the law", the symbols of the teaching and path expounded by the Buddha as well as of wisdom, knowledge and insight).

Bronze with a dark grey patina.
